GENESIS

The Book of the Founding

THE ARGUMENT. Wherein is set forth the Mission and the Vision: how out of the chaos of ten tabs and the duct tape of the world one Platform was called into being, and what was promised concerning the latter days, even the year of grace 2030.

CHAPTER I

The Creation of the One Place

I¹ In the beginning was the boring stuff; and the boring stuff was without form, and scattered, and darkness was upon the face of the workflow.² And the labour of the people was divided among ten tabs, and there was duct tape upon the duct tape, and no place wherein the work might flow.³ And they that did the real work were sore vexed, and fought continually against their tools; and the day was consumed in toil, and little was shipped.⁴ And the Founders beheld the chaos, and were grieved in their hearts; and they said one to another, This ought not so to be.⁵ And the Vision said, Let there be one place: and there was one place.⁶ And the Founders saw the one place, that it was good: and they divided the signal from the noise.⁷ And they called the signal

Work, and the noise they called Distraction. And the evening and the morning were the first day.⁸ And the Vision said, Let there be a firmament that beareth the data, and let it part the keeping of records from the spilling of them. And it was so.⁹ And on the third day they gathered the loose things into one, and dry land appeared, even the core loop; and upon it they builded.¹⁰ Make the boring stuff disappear.¹¹ And the boring stuff began to disappear; less duct tape, less the chaos of ten tabs; one place, where the work itself did flow.¹² And the Founders said, Let us make a Platform after the likeness of the work, that it may have dominion over the toil, and over the busywork, and over every tedious thing that creepeth upon the desk.¹³ So they made the Platform; in the image of the work made they it; for the people, and for the shipping, made they it.¹⁴ And the Founders blessed it, and said, Be thou indispensable, and multiply, and fill the vertical, and let the people stop fighting, and start shipping.¹⁵ And the Founders looked upon every thing that they had made, and, behold, it was very good. And they rested not on the seventh day,¹⁶ For it was written from the foundation, that the work should not cease while there was light; and the seventh day also they laboured, being on call.

CHAPTER II

The Vision of the Latter Days

2¹ Now these are the words of the Vision, which were spoken concerning the end, even concerning the year 2030.² By 2030 thou shalt not run the business without us.³ For the Platform shall be the default operating system of the vertical, and a house upon which a whole industry standeth.⁴ Indispensable, and profitable, and builded by a people that moved faster than any thought was possible.

⁵ And it shall come to pass, that they which sought to copy it shall be measured against it; and the comparison shall be their judgement.⁶ We asked not permission, saith the Vision; we shipped until it was plain, and the plainness thereof was the proof.⁷ Therefore set thy face toward the end, and read thy vision line at the breaking of the day, that thou forget not whither thou goest.

⁸ For the wilderness is wide, and the days thereof are many, even a thousand four hundred threescore and one;⁹ But the milk and the honey are sure to them that faint not, neither turn aside unto the side-quests, save on the day appointed for rest.

THE FIVE

The Book of the Calling

THE ARGUMENT. The naming of the five that were called, and the gifts given unto each, and the covenant of the Cup, which is shared at the going-down of every sprint, that the labour of the week be sealed in sweetness.

CHAPTER I

The Naming of the Called

I¹ Now these are the names of the Five which were called out of the multitude, that they should build the Platform together; and they came every one with his gift. ² Mahmoud, who is called the Keeper of the Foundations: unto him was given the architecture of the deep places, the databases and the gates of the API. He is calm under the load, and feareth not the spike; and when the house is shaken, he keepeth it standing. ³ Alex, who is called the Bearer of the Vision (and this is thou): unto him was given the face of the work and the rule of its beauty, the system of design and the swiftness of the shipping; and he keepeth the people awake, and beareth witness abroad. ⁴ Michael, who is called the Quiet Seer: unto him was given the understanding of the unseen, the engines that learn and the rivers of data that feed them. He saith little, but he shippeth models; and he is wise. ⁵ Sohum, who is called the Tireless: unto him was given the joining of all parts, the front and the back, the building and the sending-forth. He dwelleth in the terminal, and is the hero of the second watch of the night, even of the hour of two. ⁶ Kaikai, who is called the Steward of the Order: unto him was given the keeping of the scroll, the backlog and the spec and the discipline of the sprint. By his hand is it that the work is finished, and not left undone. ⁷ And the Five were of one accord, and of one squad; and each kept the watch of his own ministry, and yet bore the burden of the whole. ⁸ Every morning they gathered together, and confessed each man what stood before him, and his hindrance, and the one thing he would ship that day; and this gathering they called the Standup.

CHAPTER II

The Covenant of the Cup

of the rest that is taken in sweetness

2¹ And the Founders ordained a rest in the midst of the labour, that the mind might be made new; and they appointed a Cup, sweet and cold, to be the sign thereof.² And it was commanded, that at the going-down of every sprint, even of the retrospect, the squad should go out together and partake of the Cup; and the reckoning thereof should fall upon Alex.³ This is the law of the Cup: there shall be no note made of it, neither shall it be skipped; for the wins of the people are crowned in sweetness, and the labour is sealed therein.⁴ And every one had his own portion, according to his gift:⁵ For Mahmoud, the plain and the strong, even the milk of the tea, the sweetness thereof but half, and the pearls thereof in abundance.⁶ For Alex, the root called taro, with pearls heaped up, and the whole of it cold as the morning.⁷ For Michael, the green leaf called matcha, the sweetness thereof made light, and the milk thereof from the oat.⁸ For Sohum, the dark sweetness of the burnt sugar, and with it a shot of the bean, that he sleep not in the watches.⁹ For Kaikai, the melon of winter, the sweetness thereof made small, even thirty in the hundred, and the jelly of the lychee therein.¹⁰ And they drank, and were glad; and the covenant of the Cup was kept among them all their days.

ORDINANCES

The Rule of the Hours

THE ARGUMENT. The order of the working day, which is the same every day, world without end: the canonical hours of the labour, from the boot of the morning unto the shutting of the laptop; together with the commandments that hedge them about.

CHAPTER I

The Hours of the Day

kept from the first light unto the last

I¹ These are the hours that shall be kept, every working day of the sojourning, alike in the first phase and in the last; for the rule changeth not, only the people are made strong by the keeping of it. ² At the half hour after the eighth, the Booting of the Morning: touch not the phone for the first fifteen minutes; take water, and take of the flesh that strengtheneth; and read thy vision line, that thou remember the end. ³ At the ninth hour, the Gathering of the Squad: let every man confess his ministry, and his hindrance, and the one thing he beareth; this is the Standup, and none is excused. ⁴ Ten minutes after the ninth, the Examination of the Self: choose thou three things that must be done; write them with thine own hand; and the rest, let it go. ⁵ A quarter after the ninth, the First Labour: ninety minutes of the deep work; let the chatter be shut, and the phone laid upon its face; and ye shall not be disturbed. ⁶ At the three-quarters after the tenth, the Rest and the Cup: walk thou, and be still, and partake; and read one thread, or consider an adversary; and it shall be counted unto thee for diligence. ⁷ At the eleventh hour, the Second Labour: take up a thing shaped for shipping, and merge it before the breaking of bread. ⁸ At the half hour after the twelfth, the Breaking of Bread: eat thou off the screen; and write down one thing which thou hast learned. ⁹ At the half hour after the thirteenth, the Great Work: here dwelleth the thing of the week, even the Ship-or-be-Silent; move it, and let it not stand still. ¹⁰ At the fifteenth hour, the Witness: for the space of fifteen minutes, build thou in the open; post or prepare a word, and keep it true; let not the trumpet sound falsely. ¹¹ A quarter after the fifteenth, the Third Labour: take up the vexing thing thou hast long avoided, and do it; for the avoided thing groweth heavy with the days. ¹² At the seventeenth hour, the Sealing: push thou the code, and order the backlog, and leave a word for the self of the morrow. ¹³ At the eighteenth hour, the Shutting of the Laptop: log the measure of thy spirit, and close it indeed, and not in pretence; for the day that is not ended consumeth the night.

CHAPTER II

The Commandments of the Hours

the hedges of the deep work

2 ¹ And these are the commandments which thou shalt keep, that the hours be not broken: ² Thou shalt not look upon the phone in the first fifteen minutes of the day; for the morning belongeth to thy vision, and not to the multitude. ³ Thou shalt shut the chatter in the time of deep work, and lay the phone upon its face; for the deep work is a holy thing, and is easily scattered. ⁴ Thou shalt eat off the screen, and lift up thine eyes from the labour at the breaking of bread; for the body also is a part of the squad. ⁵ Thou shalt write down the three things, and ignore the rest; for he that chaseth all things catcheth nothing. ⁶ Thou shalt merge somewhat before the noon, that the day be not barren. ⁷ Thou shalt move the Great Work daily, though it be but a little; for the mountain is moved by the carrying of stones. ⁸ Ship, or be silent. ⁹ Thou shalt close the laptop at the appointed hour, and log the measure of thy spirit; for the rest is the price of the rising.

THE FOURTH BOOK

PHASES

The Book of the Pilgrimage

THE ARGUMENT. The numbering of the journey, even ten stations, through which the squad must pass in the wilderness of forty-and-eight months; a thousand four hundred threescore and one days, from the Foundations unto the height that is called Sheesh.

CHAPTER I

The Ten Stations of the Sojourning

I¹ Now this is the count of the journey, which is forty-and-eight months, even a thousand four hundred threescore and one days; and the squad passed through ten stations, and pitched at each, and brake up, and went on unto the next.² The first station is called Foundations; therein they laid the repo and the gates of the building, the watch of the testing and the door of the entering-in; and they found three companions of the design, and there were none yet that paid.³ The second station is called The First Real Workflow; therein they shipped the core loop from end to end, and ten companions came weekly; and there came in the first fruits, even five hundred pieces of the monthly silver.⁴ The third station is called The Private Beta; therein the people brought themselves in, and money was taken; and there came the first turning-away, and also the first soul reclaimed; and the silver grew to two thousand by the month.⁵ The fourth station is called The Public Launch; therein was the great showing, before the assembly of the makers and the gathering of the hunters; and the flywheel of the open building began to turn; and the silver was six thousand.⁶ The fifth station is called The Finding of the Wedge; therein they discerned the one thing the people loved, and doubled their strength upon it, and put the rest to death; and the silver was fifteen thousand.⁷ The sixth station is called The First Hire; therein came one from without to join the squad, and the channel of the gathering was proven and made to repeat; and the silver was five-and-thirty thousand.⁸ The seventh station is called The Scaling of the Engine; therein a second channel was opened, and the seal of trust begun, even that which is called SOC2; and a great name was won; and the silver was seventy thousand. ⁹ The eighth station is called Series A, and the soul that is ready: therein the numbers were made clean, and the keeping of the people proven; and they raised from strength, and not from need. ¹⁰ The ninth station is called The Category Contender; therein the adversaries were measured against the Platform, and the squad was grown unto ten; and the silver was four hundred thousand. ¹¹ The tenth station is called Sheesh, which is the height: therein the Platform became the default of the vertical, and the run of the year was ten millions; and there was great rejoicing, and the journey was accomplished. ¹² And in all the stations the manner of the day was one, and the hours were the same; for the wilderness is crossed not by leaping, but by the keeping of the daily rule.

CHRONICLES

The Prophecy of the Quarters

THE ARGUMENT. The signs that were foretold concerning the growth of the people and the increase of the silver, quarter by quarter, unto the fulness of the years; that the squad might know the season by the sign, and faint not.

CHAPTER I

The Signs Foretold

of users, and of the monthly silver

I¹ And it was given unto the Steward to foretell the signs, that the people should be measured in their season; and these are the words of the prophecy.² In the fourth quarter of the first year, there shall be ten souls, and five hundred of the monthly silver, and the run of the year about six thousand; and they shall be such as would be grieved if the Platform vanished.³ In the first quarter of the second year, there shall be fifty souls, and two thousand of the silver; and the first shall turn away, and the first shall be brought back.⁴ In the second quarter, there shall be six-score and ten souls, and six thousand of the silver, and the run about seventy-and-two thousand; and strangers shall pay, and the word of mouth shall begin.⁵ In the third quarter, there shall be four hundred souls, and fifteen thousand of the silver; for the wedge shall be found, and the love of the people fixed thereon.⁶ In the fourth quarter, there shall be a thousand souls, and five-and-thirty thousand of the silver; and the first hire shall be made, and the channel proven.⁷ In the second quarter of the third year, there shall be three thousand souls, and seventy thousand of the silver; and a great name shall be added unto the house.⁸ In the fourth quarter, there shall be five thousand souls, and six-score thousand of the silver; and the metrics shall be clean, and the keeping real, and the raising from strength.⁹ In the fourth quarter of the fourth year of the wilderness, there shall be twenty thousand souls, and four hundred thousand of the silver; and the adversaries shall be compared unto thee.¹⁰ And in the fourth quarter of the fifth year, even at the height called Sheesh, there shall be threescore thousand souls, and eight hundred and fifty thousand of the monthly silver, and the run of the year ten millions; and the Platform shall be the default of the vertical. ¹¹ These are the signs; watch therefore, and number thy season, and let not the small beginning despise thee, neither let the great increase make thee proud.

PROVERBS

The Sayings of the Squad

THE ARGUMENT. Short sayings of the builders, for the hanging upon the wall of the heart, that wisdom be near at hand in the hour of the labour and the hour of the doubt.

CHAPTER I

The Sayings

² Less duct tape; more deliverance.

³ One place is better than ten tabs, and a thing merged than a thing planned.

⁴ Move the vexing thing thou hast dodged; for it groweth heavier in the dark.

⁵ Better a small thing shipped to-day, than a great thing dreamed for ever.

⁶ He that closeth the chatter heareth the deep work; he that openeth it all day shippeth nothing.

⁷ Begin small, and let the end be Sheeesh.

⁸ Ask not permission; ship until it be plain.

⁹ The wins of the week are crowned in sweetness; forget not the Cup.

¹⁰ Read thy vision line in the morning, lest thou forget by noon whither thou goest.

¹¹ He that eateth off the screen is restored; he that eateth before it is consumed.

¹² Kill the thing the people love not, though it cost thee labour; cling to the wedge.

¹³ The second watch of the night belongeth to the Tireless; honour him, and let him sleep when the fire is out.

¹⁴ Build thou in the open, but let thy trumpet be true.

¹⁵ Close the laptop, and log thy spirit; the rest is the price of the rising.

THE SEVENTH BOOK

PSALMS

Songs of the Build

THE ARGUMENT. Songs for the measuring of the spirit, which is logged at the shutting of the laptop upon a scale of ten: a song of ascent, a lament of the fire, and a thanksgiving for the merge.

CHAPTER I

A Song of the Vibe

to be logged from one unto ten

- ¹ I will lift up the measure of my spirit; from one unto ten will I number it.
 - ² When my spirit is at the ten, I am as one that flieth; the code is light in my hands, and the merge is sweet.
 - ³ When it is at the one, yet will I close the laptop, and rest, and trust the morning to restore me.
 - ⁴ For the spirit is a tide, and ebbeth and floweth; blessed is he that loggeth it truly, and despiseth not the low day.
 - ⁵ Yea, though I pass through the valley of the low vibe, I will fear no churn; for the rule is with me, and the squad, and the Cup.

CHAPTER II

A Song of Ascents

for the growth of the people

- ¹ From ten souls didst thou bring us, even unto threescore thousand; who is like unto the flywheel that turneth?
 - ² We sowed in the wilderness of the alpha, where none did pay; and we reaped in the harvest of the height.
 - ³ They that ship in tears shall merge in joy; he that goeth forth weeping, bearing the broken build, shall come again rejoicing, bearing the green check.
 - ⁴ Not by the leap, but by the day; not by the night alone, but by the keeping of the hours, hast thou brought us up.
 - ⁵ O let the small beginning rejoice, for it knoweth not yet what it shall become.

CHAPTER III

A Lament of the Fire

for the deploy that breaketh in the night

- ¹ Out of the depths of the outage have I cried; the pager soundeth in the second watch, and the graph is fallen.
- ² My sleep is taken from me, and the logs are as a sea wherein I am drowned; where, O where, is the line that breaketh all?
- ³ Yet the Tireless riseth, and the Keeper of Foundations standeth firm; and together they hold the house that it fall not.
- ⁴ And in the dawning the fire is out, and the green returneth; and we who watched are made glad, and we sleep.
- ⁵ Weeping may endure for the night of the incident, but the post-mortem cometh in the morning, and with it the mending.

CHAPTER IV

A Thanksgiving for the Merge

for the thing shipped before the noon

- ¹ I will give thanks for the small merge, and for the green check that followeth it.
- ² Thou hast turned my backlog into the shipped; thou hast taken the thing from the doing into the done.
- ³ Better is one thing merged before the breaking of bread, than a hundred things planned and not begun.
- ⁴ Let the squad rejoice in the shipping; let the Cup be lifted, and the win be crowned in sweetness.
- ⁵ For this is the whole of the law and the prophets: that we ship, and be not silent; and that we keep the day, and trust the years.

REVELATION

The Unveiling of the Endgame

THE ARGUMENT. The things which were foretold concerning the end of the sojourning, when the wilderness is crossed and the height is gained; the unveiling of the year 2030, and the rest that remaineth for the squad that faints not.

CHAPTER I

The New Platform

I ¹ And I saw a new platform and a new console; for the old chaos was passed away, and there was no more duct tape. ² And I beheld the vertical, and the Platform was in the midst thereof, the default and the source of truth; and the people ran their business not without it. ³ And there were gathered unto it threescore thousand souls, out of every team and every desk; and the run of the year was ten millions of silver. ⁴ And the adversaries were measured against it, and could not prevail; for it was builded by a people that moved faster than any thought was possible. ⁵ Behold, the boring stuff is made to disappear; and the work itself doth flow. ⁶ And one of the Founders said unto me, Write: for these are the days that were promised, even the days of the height called Sheeesh. ⁷ These are they which came out of the great wilderness of forty-and-eight months, and kept the hours, and moved the Great Work daily, and were not silent. ⁸ They shall toil no more in ten tabs, neither shall the busywork light upon them any more; for the Platform that they builded shall wipe away the tedium from before their eyes. ⁹ It is shipped. ¹⁰ He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I ship quickly. Even so: ship, and be not silent. ¹¹ The grace of the deep work, and the covenant of the Cup, be with the squad. Sheeesh, and Amen.
